Foreword

Being a huge fan of the timpani, I thought it would be so much fun to combine two instruments that are not commonly paired as duets in the performance hall. I love it when percussionists combine their talents and perform duets on whatever instruments they wish to use. It allows the performers to individually prepare their parts, put them together and enjoy the final product. The use of duets also provides the players an opportunity to perform without the use of a conductor. The students learn the importance of good eye contact, attention to tempo and dynamics. Even more important, the students learn how essential it is to work with one another while learning to develop great practice habits.
